OBEY YOUR COUNTRY'S COMMAND.

Every loyal American has a part to perform in this war. What he should do is well told in these few words from the Denver Post:

"Don't think you can improve on the way the government is being run, you cannot; moreover, this is the day and the hour when respect for constituted authority is demanded by everybody, from the president of the United States down to the least among us. Accept things as they are and if you honestly desire to serve your country, find out what the authorized agents of the government want you to do—and do it!"

HOW TO OBTAIN FAIR BUILDINGS.

Three good suggestions, in connection with the fair to be held in 1919, are offered by a distinguished Ogdenite, who favors the erecting of a new tabernacle, a new city and county building and a large bathing resort on Promontory Point.

Our friend would so construct the tabernacle and city and county building as to make them available as exhibition structures, before the finishing touches were placed on the edifices to be turned over for regular service. He would have the conference of the church held in the tabernacle and the state fair exhibits placed in the city and county building, the fair being transferred to Ogden. He would build a large pleasure resort at Promontory Point and have special train service to the resort as one form of entertainment for sightseers.

In a measure, this plan would help solve the question of finances, as two very large structures would be made available without expense to the fair commission. It would be something novel in world's fair arrangements. The idea of utilizing partly constructed permanent buildings as exhibition places would appeal to those who see a waste of energy in fair buildings which are venerated and serve no lasting purpose.

GRAND JURY ON TUESDAY.

Will the grand jury reconvene on next Tuesday?
 With the indictments falling flat, our opinion is the jury will meet and immediately adjourn.

A mistake was made in indicting Chief Browning, and that fact is now generally recognized. The grand jurors did their duty as they saw it, but, finding nothing more serious than made public, they should have restricted their report to reprimands.

If there is nothing more important before the jury than so far disclosed, further expense at this time is hardly warranted.

CHANGES IN METHODS OF WARFARE.

Comparing the battle of Arras with the battle of the Marne in importance, and commenting on the changed method of warfare, the San Francisco Chronicle reaches the conclusion that the end of the trench deadlock on the western front has been reached. Showing the different stages of fighting, the Chronicle presents these facts:

"At the beginning of the war Germany sprang a surprise in the form of sixteen-inch guns, which, in astonishingly short time, made dust and ashes of the most adamant fortifications. Liege, Namur and Antwerp, believed to be impregnable, and actually demonstrated as effective against infantry, light and medium artillery, crumbled to pieces when stormed by howitzers. Then came the trenches, against which the enormous siege guns were powerless. It was one thing to pound at a definite mark in the shape of steel and concrete buttressed forts, and quite another dropping ton shells into rows and rows of trenches stretching for miles and capable of being repaired almost as quickly as they were destroyed. Two years ago nothing else was so much talked of as those irresistible siege guns; since then they have counted for very little. They were brought up to Verdun, but when they had done their worst, Germany was no nearer to capturing the city, and for the simple reason that the trench had superseded the obsolete fort. For nearly two years the trench was the supreme method of warfare. Given opposing armies of anything like equal forces, equipment and valor, and there was no breaking its deadlock over an extended line. Then in June of last year came the perfection of the barrage, or 'curtain of fire.' The side with superiority in number, quality and accuracy of artillery could spray the enemy trenches with a garden hose, its infantry calmly advancing, not rushing, under the curtain which was lifted and extended to the next line when the men were near enough to jump into the pits and engage the demoralized foe."

WE MUST HAVE A HOME GUARD.

We are very much surprised to hear that some of our leading citizens and business men, those who should be the most deeply concerned, see no necessity for the organization of a home guard. They must have overlooked the fires and explosions that have recently been started by incendiaries in the manufacturing plants in the east, and the fact that, as we begin to put our factories into commission for the increased production of food and war supplies, the same treatment may be expected by our industrial plants. The national guard will soon be on duty out of the state and the only protection life and property will then have will be what is afforded by the citizens themselves. Every German, Austrian or Bulgarian male adult is a trained soldier.

He had several years of military training and service before he was permitted to leave his native country, and, wherever he may be, he is able to shoulder a rifle and fall into line.

One hundred of such armed men—German, Austrian and Bulgarian—could be gotten together in a few hours and could hold this city in terror longer than would be comfortable for any of us. And while that was going on our factories, supply stations, and valuable public buildings would be destroyed before we could turn a hand.

A well organized and equipped home guard would save us all such humiliation because the enemy would know that we were ready and would deal sternly with them. Business men and leading citizens should become members and help establish a strong, effective organization of the home guard—and it should be done without a day's delay. See what you can do to help.

NERVES OF GERMANS GIVE WAY.

Perhaps more significant than any news from out of Germany in the past six months is the statement of the military critic of the Vossische Zeitung that he has received many letters which prove that "the nerves of many readers are beginning to give way." He refers to the "unfounded" excitement which he states is spreading among those at home.

Students of German temperament have predicted that when the breaking strain is reached, the Teutonic resistance will crumble in a day.

If the German military critic is correctly quoted, the war is now in its last stages, and riotous scenes are about to be witnessed in Germany.

Unless Hindenburg develops a master stroke on the Russian front, the crisis is at hand.

UNDER THE FLAG (By FLORENCE EARLE COATES.)

Under our own flag still we sail her,
 Gaily sail her, our own ship of state;
 Faiths we have lived by still shall avail her,
 Hope at her prow, wing'd, expectant, elate!

Over the deeps of a perilous ocean,
 Honor compelling, we still will sail
 On,
 Giving, unflinching, a loyal devotion,
 Until in life, in death, danger is gone.

Deem not that we, whom our fathers before us
 Taught to love freedom and died to make free,
 Cowards shall fly, while the heavens are o'er us,
 Craft of the ether or boats under sea.

There is in valor that hearkens to duty
 Something that dearer may be than long years;
 And in man's service there may be a beauty
 Higher than glory and deeper than tears.

CHANT OF A GERMAN-AMERICAN (By CHARLES D. KOUNTZ.)

"If the war results in a world of republics, it will have justified itself."
 —(Anon.)

Brothers, O brothers, over the sea,
 When will ye strike for liberty?
 When will ye learn that the right divine
 Is the right to be free? and the right is thine!

Behold the Bear That Walks Like a Man,
 And grasp the meaning, if ye can!
 Then, having learned the meaning, heed!
 The Bear has become a Man, indeed!

Look to the East, where the sun begins;
 Mongols unfettered from rulers' sins!
 And are ye even less than they,
 That they must teach ye freedom's way?

Look to this glorious land of the West,
 Drawing from every race its best!
 Saxon and Teuton and Slav and Celt,
 Common all in a yearning felt!

What is the thing that drives ye on
 Where a million men to their graves have gone?
 The lust for power, now turned to hate!
 Have ye forgotten Babel's fate?

The world has need for your fine, red blood,
 Rushing to waste in a very flood.
 Lost for a single ruler's gain!
 Lost for a sinful cause and vain!

Brothers, O brothers, over the sea,
 When will ye strike for liberty?
 When will ye turn and by your might
 Achieve the one God-given right?

EXPLOSIVE FOUND IN PRESS ROOM

NEW YORK, April 13.—A loaded three-inch shell weighing fifteen pounds, made in the United States, was found in the press room of the New York Globe tonight after the last edition had gone to press. According to the police, the shell was leaning against one of the presses in such a position that it would have been exploded had the machinery been started. The discovery was made by an employee of the newspaper. Government agents and detectives are trying to learn who placed it there.

GRANDMOTHER OF REVOLUTION

Famous Woman Greeted by Petrograd on Her Return From Siberia.

PETROGRAD, Wednesday, April 11, via London, April 13, 4:15 p. m.—The arrival in Petrograd today of Madame Catherine Breshkovskaya was the occasion of a dramatic gathering of veterans of the former revolutionary and terrorist times to give her an enthusiastic and emotional welcome.

All Petrograd, in fact, turned out to acclaim the "grandmother of the revolution" on her homecoming from Siberia, where she had spent forty-four of her seventy-three years in exile. A vast crowd, waving red flags and singing the Marseillaise, extended down the west end of the Nevsky Prospect as far as the Nikolaievsk railway station. When the Associated Press correspondent arrived he found the crowd trying to storm the station, to which were admitted only veterans. Nihilists and a deputation from the ministry of justice, headed by Minister of Justice Kerensky, together with delegations of welcome from Petrograd, Moscow and Dorpat universities and high schools.

Royal Welcome.
 At the suggestion of M. Kerensky the reception committee adopted a plan unique in Russian history for the welcoming of Madame Breshkovskaya—a plan symbolizing Russia's transition from autocracy to democracy. The welcome took place in the gorgeous suite in the railway station called the Imperial reception rooms, which under the old regime were used only for the reception of royal personages. The large drawing room of this suite, which had been the scene of meetings of the world's most powerful monarchs, was now the gathering place of the world's most extreme Democrats, Republicans and Socialists. Around the room were scores of baskets and wreaths of flowers, the scarlet tulip predominating—a flower which bids fair to become the floral emblem of the new Russia.

Veterans Meet Again.
 Among the revolutionary veterans the correspondent found Mme. Vera Figner, Mlle. Vera Zassulich, the former duma members, Danilchuk and Professor Cholas Moorhoff. Mme. Figner spent twenty years in jail, but was released from Siberia through a whim of Nicholas II, after he had been pleased with the singing of her brother at a concert.

Beside her stood Mlle. Zassulich, first among the most extreme women terrorists under Alexander II, who, thirty-six years ago, then a slight, pretty girl of an aristocratic family, shot and dangerously wounded General Trepoft, the despotic governor of Petrograd, in vengeance for his reputed torturing of political prisoners. By an irony of the revolution General Trepoft's son, former Premier Trepoft, is today a prisoner in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul.

Once Sentenced to Death.
 Consoling with Mlle. Zassulich was M. Planitch, who sat in the second duma under Premier Stolypin and was sentenced to death on a trumped-up charge of conspiracy to murder Emperor Nicholas and was led through the street of Petrograd in chains.

The Associated Press correspondent met Professor Morosoff, a famous chemist and commentator of the Apocryphic, who was suspected of advising the conspirators who made the bomb that killed Alexander II. Professor Morosoff for twenty-three years never left his cell in the Schlusselburg fortress.

"Tell your people the revolution this time has achieved a final and irrevocable triumph," he said to the correspondent today.

As the train arrived the crowd again attempted to storm the station, crying "Let us see grandmother!" The militia quelled them, explaining the danger of a crush and assuring them they would be allowed to participate in the welcome of Madame Breshkovskaya, who was eager to see all her "grandchildren" and be seen by them.

REAR ADMIRAL SIMS IN LONDON

American Officer to Co-operate With British Admiralty on War Plans.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Rear Admiral William S. Sims, president of the naval war college at Newport, whose arrival in Great Britain has been announced in London private dispatches, was sent there to act as an intermediary between British admiralty officials and the navy department in the working out of problems involved in participation by the American navy in the ranks of the entente powers. His mission was admitted at the navy department today after news of his safe voyage had been received.

The admiral also is charged with the duty of keeping the department fully advised as to the conduct of the war and of supplying such information as the navy needs in preparing itself for the tasks ahead. Conferences between the French, British and American naval colleges, now in progress here, are expected to produce an early agreement for concerted action between the naval establishments in addition to the duty of patrolling the Atlantic in this hemisphere already assigned to the United States.

Before his assignment to the naval war college, Admiral Sims devoted much time to the study of naval engagements in the European war. He prepared numerous critical reviews of the tactics employed, which have been widely read by navy officers.

To Admiral Sims the American navy owes largely its present highly developed proficiency in gunfire. When naval promotions were made on the basis of selection for merit last year, Sims, then captain, was one of the first officers named by the board of nine rear admirals to rise to his present grade.
